

Guide to a positive future:

Some in the political right feel that they are the way to oppose the power of the international banking elite. Indeed this is one approach to heading off the inroads that the world bankers have made over the years. However, there is another way... a way that goes beyond both politics and religion. That is, the way of those who genuinely care about others. For, in the world, there are truly only two types: Those who are only in service to themselves (service to self) and those with true concern for the well-being of others (service to others).

Over the centuries, the long-term advantage has gone to those with substantial political and financial leverage. To have a long-term advantage, it requires some type of organization to hold things together over multiple lifetimes. And for this, ideology and religion have often been used as two ways in which to carry the gains from one generation to the next. Although the members of notable ideologies and religions have claimed that their actions are for the good of their ideology, religion and others, it only takes a closer look to see that most of their membership are instead serving their own interests. This 'two-layer' approach is not unlike the methods that the banking elite use through their media houses. More often than not there is the story that is broadcast or printed paired with the hidden true story of that same event or person. The story that the public is shown is generally of the opposite motivation of the truth. Thankfully, those who seek to deceive seem to have large egos and many cannot help but to boast of their deceptions to others in their circle. Watch for this and bring their crowing to light.

Those who are of service to others are not to be confused with slaves. They help others and are concerned for others because that's what their gut tells them is right. They need no book or group to tell them what is right action and what is wrong action. They need only sit quietly and wait for the answers to arrive to them. They feel no need to demonstrate or resort to violence; in fact, they abhor violence and see all as their brothers and sisters -- however misguided their extended family may be. The motivations of those who are service to others extends beyond this lifetime. They think bigger than the here and now, yet work in the interest of making both the present and future more positive. There is a higher morality and these people are guided by it.

There are those of the banking elite who claim that they're justified and are simply assisting their religion. They claim that their actions are part of a prophecy and that their own membership must endure great losses before their eventual global triumph over those who are not of their group. So strongly do some of them believe this that it does no good for those driven to violence to kill those of this group, since many of them will simply welcome it and see it as furthering their cause. Certainly, they will throw others of their own kind before them and make their escape -- if possible. But in their minds they have decided that this type of strife is not only necessary but inevitable.

Instead, there are other ways to fight them. These include:

- Being wary of their media. One may consume their media, but they needn't believe it.
- Balancing what society pressures you to do and say under media pressure with what constitutes good, fair, and correct behavior.
- Calmly challenging political policies that hurt people and the countries that they love.
- Refusing to engage in staged wars and being able to see the strings that are being pulled.
- Creating and sharing your own media, backed by irrefutable facts with supporting evidence.
- Working toward free energy technologies and near-free energy technologies (this may require keeping multiple copies of records in various places and research under secrecy until working, mass-produced energy generators can be distributed around the world -- followed by open-source publication of all information required to construct more).
- Setting the ego aside and being willing to work without your name ever being known.
- Making freely available information that truly helps others (including animals, forests, oceans, the globe, and even the solar system).
- Visualizing a positive future.

In this way, those who are service to others oriented can undo the work of those who are service-to-self and bent on global enslavement of all who are not of their group. Those who care shall flow like water through the hands of those who seek oppressive control.

Know that service-to-other people exist in all countries, all ideologies, and all religions -- even that of the banking elite. They are there and they can help in their own way. You know who you are and you know what your intuition is telling you is right -- even if it goes against what your peers tell you that you are obligated to do. There is no need to reveal yourselves, only to be intelligent and careful before taking any kind of action, however subtle.

Best wishes to you all.
